THINGS TO DO

Here's how to explore Treasure Island right now — before it gets developed

Often overlooked isle offers good eats, wine tasting, history and incredible views

(Jane Tyska/Bay Area News Group)

A view of the Bay Bridge is seen beyond a geese-filled playing field on Treasure Island in San Francisco..

By CHUCK BARNEY | Bay Area News Group

PUBLISHED: June 23, 2021 at 7:00 a.m. | UPDATED: June 23, 2021 at 7:01 a.m.

Like so many Bay Area residents, Michael Hennahane hadn't given much thought to Treasure Island.

During the first 20 years he lived in San Francisco, Hennahane had never even set foot on the flat, 400-acre slab of land anchored in the waters between San Francisco and Oakland. For all that time — including countless treks across the Bay Bridge — the site, in his mind, was “no more than a freeway exit sign.”

That is until a friend finally coaxed Hennahane to visit. What he saw left him stunned.

“I was so blown away,” he recalls. “Here was this very rich place right under our noses and yet, so overlooked. Every time I returned, I found something new and unique and weird and interesting.”

Flash-forward, and Hennahane is now president of the Treasure Island Museum, the entity dedicated to preserving the island’s history. And what fascinating history there is to preserve.

Created from landfill in 1936 and sharing the name of Robert Louis Stevenson’s fabled pirates saga, Treasure Island was host to the 1939-40 Golden Gate International Exposition, which attracted nearly 20 million visitors from all over the world. At one point, the island was envisioned as a municipal airport for San Francisco, but World War II intervened, and it wound up serving as a U.S. Navy station from 1942 to 1997. Since the 1980s, the island’s mammoth airplane hangars frequently have housed Hollywood film and TV productions.

These days, Treasure Island and its closely conjoined neighbor, Yerba Buena Island, are home to just under 2,000 San Francisco residents living in rental housing. But a massive, \$6 billion redevelopment plan now underway eventually will bring 8,000 new homes, as well as three hotels, restaurants, parks, a new ferry terminal and upscale retailers.

All of which leave Treasure Island currently in a sort of limbo — or “a funky in-between,” as Linda Edson, owner of the island’s popular Aracely Cafe, describes it.

Indeed, historic, midcentury buildings and remnants from the exposition share the turf with construction sites that hint at intriguing changes to come. But a drive along the uncrowded backroads also reveals sights that, quite frankly, feel like something out of a zombie-apocalypse movie, as decayed and vacated buildings mix with mountainous piles of rubble.

And the pandemic certainly didn’t help. Some retailers who were here as recently as a year or so ago, chose to close shop when confronted with economic challenges too formidable to overcome.

“To be honest, Treasure Island is a little moribund right now,” Hennahane admits. “But I think things are going to crack open as the development progresses.”

That doesn't mean there aren't things to do and places to see while Treasure Island undergoes its dramatic facelift. An exhilarating Bay Bridge bike ride (or drive) might be all you need to spend a few hours away from the bustle of the city.

Incentives? Start with the sweeping sight lines.

“If you want to experience the most spectacular views of San Francisco, you need to come here,” says MeeSun Boice, the ultra charming co-owner of Mersea restaurant. “Where else can you see the Bay Bridge to the city, the Bay Bridge to Oakland, Angel Island and the Golden Gate Bridge? And on a clear day, you can actually see the windows of the buildings on Alcatraz.”

Indeed, the scenery is so beguiling, you'll often find tourists perched along Treasure Island's rocky western shoreline taking Instagram-ready selfies or dreamy-eyed newlyweds posing for their wedding photos.

Mersea, located just a stone's throw from the water's edge, capitalizes on that unobstructed scenery while exuding a playful vibe. Crafted from 13 metal shipping containers, it is imaginatively outfitted with reclaimed and recycled items.

The cooking, for example, is done in a modified military “rapid deployment” kitchen that was designed to be dropped in the middle of the Afghan desert and serve 2,400 meals a day to hungry troops. And some of the tables have been topped with wooden lanes from what was once the naval base's bowling alley. (No gutter balls, please).

In fine weather, the patio at Mersea, the “comfort casual” eatery on Treasure Island, beckons. A bocce court, putting green and outdoor seating add to the ambience. (Courtesy of Mersea)

That playfulness extends to Mersea’s outdoor seating area, which features bocce courts and a putting green and is festooned with succulent gardens. As for the food, Boice, who partnered with chef Parke Ulrich on the restaurant, describes it as “comfort casual.” Guests nosh on double-stacked cheeseburgers, crispy tacos or heavenly bowls of fish chowder while listening to live music — and gazing at the San Francisco skyline, of course.

Says Boice, sounding like Treasure Island’s biggest cheerleader, “When you want to meet up with friends, but your East Bay friends don’t want to go into the city, and the city people don’t want to go that far, this is where you can meet and socialize. Enjoy the views and enjoy each other.”

Located closer to the heart of the island is Edson’s Aracely Cafe, which offers a calm, relaxing space that includes a large patio and garden with an outdoor fireplace, lounge seating and string lights.

Choosing this under-the-radar location for her stylish eatery six years ago was a leap of faith for Edson.

“When we first started construction, there was literally nothing happening out here. No food traffic. No car traffic. Nothing,” she recalls. “But I thought: ‘If I build it, somebody will come.’”

And they do come for a menu that features California-style offerings with a mix of French and Spanish influences. (The croissant French toast with cream cheese and rhubarb is to die for.) Aracely is also inviting enough that it plays host to weddings and other private events.

If it's an urban winery experience you seek, head to Treasure Island Wines. Housed in a repurposed Navy commissary, it's a six-brand collective that produces what the owners call "affordable luxury artisan wines" in a pet-friendly environment.

The rustically engaging setting, with its terra cotta tiles, is an ideal place to create bottled poetry, according to Dennis Hayes, the principal winemaker with Umbriaso.

"We're surrounded by chilled water, and we have prevailing cool breezes," he points out. "So we've got natural air conditioning, unlike the wineries in Napa and elsewhere."

Apparently, Treasure Island is also a great place to brew (and drink) beer. For several years, it was home to the Woods Island Club, a so-called "beer beach," where guests could sample suds while sinking their feet into (trucked-in) sand.

Alas, the Island Club shut down due to the pandemic, and access problems created by the redevelopment. But Jim Woods, the co-founder and CEO of Woods Beer & Wine Co. hopes to soon open another retail site close by. Meanwhile, the production side of the company continues to "brew up a storm" on Treasure Island, and his beers are served at both Aracely and Mersea.

"We're not going anywhere," Woods says. "We believe in Treasure Island long term. I love how it's just 15 minutes on the bus or Uber (from San Francisco), and you feel like you're on a different planet."

As Woods and others look forward to the shimmering enhancements the future will bring, Hennahane and his team are working to make sure that Treasure Island's distinctive past doesn't get lost in all the commotion.

Their quaint museum, located in Building One along the Avenue of the Palms, shut down during the pandemic (and was still closed as of this writing), but continued to offer online exhibits, lectures, self-guided Treasure Island tours and more.

And with redevelopment comes aspiration. Fundraising is underway for a bigger, glossier facility — complete with theaters and virtual reality attractions.

"We want to be a full-sized, modern museum, rather than a repository for dusty items," Hennahane says. "Like the island itself, we're changing with the times."

San Francisco Police Seek Suspect Vehicle In Treasure Island Fatal Hit-and-Run

August 4, 2021 at 11:05 am

SAN FRANCISCO (CBS SF) — San Francisco police were seeking the public's help in finding the suspect vehicle and driver involved in a fatal hit-and-run crash last week on Treasure Island.

The collision happened on July 28 at about 9:32 p.m. in the area of Treasure Island Road and Macalla Road. Police said officers were patrolling the area at the time and saw a male victim down in the roadway. Officers provided life-saving measures until medics arrived but the person was pronounced dead at the scene.

With evidence collected at the scene, investigators determined the suspect vehicle is possibly a 2012 to 2016 Chevrolet Impala. The suspect vehicle would likely have some front-end damage.
