	San Francisco has an excessive number of commissions at roughly 130 and over 1,200 commissioners. This is far out of line with comparable cities that have larger populations than San Francisco like Los Angeles and San Diego. Furthermore, many of these commissions are redundant and/or deliver no discernible value to the public. Here are just a few examples: Sanitation and Streets Commission originally created for a department that doesn't even exist. Right now then the Department of Public Works has two commissions overseeing its work: Sanitation and Streets plus the Public Works Commission. 7 commissions relates to Public Utilities Commission. 6 commissions related to the Public Health Department. 5 commissions related to homelessness, yet there's been no improvement in the City's homeless situation. The result of these numerous and overlapping commissions is a tremendous amount of City staff time spent on serving these bodies. A Civil Grand Jury report found that City staff can spend as much as 10% of their time just servicing these commissions. This amounts to thousands of hours of staff time that could be better spent directly serving residents. It's time for common sense reform of our commission system. Vote for this measure to consolidate and reduce the number of commissions San Francisco has so our City government can focus on residents and not unnecessary bureaucracy. Abigail Porth Former Human Rights Commissioner

We have one of the largest city budgets in the country, but our city population has shrunk and we have been rated the worst-run city in the United States. We need to overhaul our bloated city commission structure to get things back on track. San Francisco has one of the largest number of city commissions in the country - 130 city commissions. 	No government is perfect. No one expects it to be but it must hold and maintain the public's trust. One reason for that trust to falter is when governments become bloated with unnecessary redundancy. An example of this is San Francisco's commission system. San Francisco has roughly 130 city commissions, far more than comparable cities with larger populations like San Diego and Los Angeles. Many of these commissions, whose members are un-elected, also have the power to determine policy for City departments and replace top City officials behind the scenes without public scrutiny. The lack of transparency and public awareness around the commission system has led to commissions becoming corrupt and rife with unethical behavior. Commissioners in the past have used their positions to enrich themselves and engage in influence peddling at the expense of the public. Some examples include: Graffiti Advisory Board members trying to sell their graffiti cleaning services to people complaining about graffiti A former Planning Commissioner accepting hundreds of thousands of dollars from developers seeking permit approval from the Planning Commission A former Election Commissioner tried to use his position to unfairly get a full-time job as commission secretary It's time to hold commissioners accountable and clean up the commission system. This measure will reform our commission system by reducing the power of un-elected commissioners, thereby limiting any conflict-of-interests to influence government policy. This measure will also establish mechanisms for directly holding commissioners accountable, ensuring that when commissioners engage in unethical behavior, they can be immediately removed. Vote for this measure to limit government corruption and begin the process of making San Francisco's government more transparent and accountable! Ray O'Connor Captain, Kansas Street Neighborhood Association, Potrero Hill *

	San Francisco is an incredible place filled with smart, motivated people. Our government should reflect that. It should support innovation, creativity and provide a platform for our citizens to succeed. It should give our officials the power to hire and fire and to make decisions in a constantly changing city, and most importantly, we should hold our ELECTED officials accountable if they are not doing their jobs. If we want our city to recover, we need our city to become more efficient and our leaders more responsible. Reducing the staggering amount of commissions that are filled with unelected bureaucrats is a great place to start. There is already too much red tape hindering small business, I've been caught in it multiple times. For things to truly change in SF, our city needs to run leaner and allow our elected officials to make changes without relying on commission after commission to make a decision for them. This measure will not eliminate important safety and accountability groups but it will force the city to reduce the over 130 commissions to the ones we really need vs. the ones that are filled with paybacks for political insiders. With our new tightening budget we must ensure resources are pointed to the City's key issues - not diluted by benefit packages for bureaucrats, nor caught up in review after review by commission after commission. This measure gives both the public and the city tools to tackle challenges and get things done. As a small business owner and lifetime resident of SF, I know we can do better. Please vote YES on D. Max Young Small Business Owner & Advocate

	San Francisco is facing numerous challenges, and unfortunately, our government is not structured to take them on. Our city's excessive number of nearly 130 commissions has created an inefficient and ineffective government that spends too much time serving bureaucracy and not enough time actually serving residents. Furthermore, many of the over 1,200 commissioners we have are un-elected and make impactful policy decisions behind the scenes without input from voters or elected leaders. This is an un-democratic and non-transparent form of government that favors cronies and political insiders over the public. Finally, the sheer number of un-elected commissions and their power create confusion and a lack of accountability in city government. Far too often do un-elected commissions hold up government processes and elected officials finger-point and blame commissions for a lack of progress. We must reform and reign in commissions to create a more accountable government. For San Francisco to move forward and solve the problems we face today, we urge you to vote for this much needed good government commission reform measure. This measure will streamline our commission system and take power away from un-elected commissioners. It will create the accountable and transparent city government that residents deserve. Lanier Coles SF Democratic County Central Committee Member

	San Francisco's government struggles with dysfunction, particularly evident in the fentanyl crisis and slow economic recovery. A significant cause is the bloated commission system. San Francisco has around 130 city commissions, far more than larger cities like San Diego and Los Angeles. Many commissioners are un-elected and can set policies for City departments and replace top officials without public oversight. This lack of transparency has made commissions hotbeds of corruption and unethical behavior. Some commissioners have exploited their positions for personal gain and influence. Examples include: Graffiti Advisory Board members attempting to sell their graffiti cleaning services to complainants. A former Planning Commissioner accepting large sums from developers seeking permit approvals. A former Election Commissioner trying to secure a job as commission secretary through his position. Reforming the commission system is crucial. This measure aims to reduce the power of un-elected commissioners, limiting their ability to unduly influence government policy. It will also establish mechanisms for holding commissioners accountable, ensuring swift removal for misconduct. Vote for this measure to limit government corruption and foster a more transparent and accountable government! Chinese American Democratic Club

	San Francisco continues to suffer a housing crisis driven by a shortage of housing. As a representative of the entire city, the Mayor tends to be pro-housing.
