	Among the bumper crop of ballot measures before us this November are ^{some} a few that get deep into the arcane world of the public employee pension system. Chalk it up to the government greed. Proposition I proposes charter amendments to expand pension benefits for two groups of public employees that have suffered from national "first responder" staffing shortages since the pandemic – registered nurses and the public safety communications staff who operate the 911 emergency line. It would allow the City's "per diem" registered nurses, i.e. those who currently or in the past have elected to work flexible schedules as temps (without pension benefits), to become full-time nurses for the City (with pension benefits). It also gives them the right to retroactively buy (at ^{2.5x cost} modest cost) up to three years of pension benefits for their time worked on a "per diem" basis. The Controller costs this right to buy three years' past service credit at anywhere from $1.5 million to $4.4 million, given the uncertainty as to how many nurses will exercise it. But one popular website currently gives the median pay for a registered nurse in San Francisco as $147,104 per year (85% above the national average, attributing the high wage to the high cost of living and a strong union). Nurses can't all be Mother Theresa. Proposition I also switches the pension plan for the City's emergency response 911 dispatchers from the current one to the higher-paying one used for firemen and police. The stated purpose is to deal with a current vacancy rate of 20-25% among dispatchers and an increased volume of calls from pre-pandemic levels. But better training programs are already in process. The rationale seems to be that they're all emergency services, even if the risks faced in dealing with fires and guns aren't quite the same as those involved in answering the phones. Avoid the "first responder" panic-mongering. Just say NO.
